INDEX

TO THE

HUNDRED AND SIXTEENTH VOLUME

OF THE

North American Review.

Björnson, Björnstjerne, as a Dramatist, article on, 109–138 — new political life in Norway begun in 1814, 109 — characteristics of the rival Norwegian poets Wergeland and Welhaven, 110 — Wergeland's poetical superiority proved by the fists of his champions, 112 — Björnson's childhood, 112 — University life, 113 — his first drama, Valborg, 114 — great University reunion at Upsala in 1856, 114 — Björnson's Synnöve Solbakken, 115 — his artistic directorship of the national stage at Bergen, 116 — Sketches and dramas, 116, 117 — outline and character of Halte Hulda, 118–137 — great enthusiasm at its first performance in Christiania, 136 — Björnson a truly national poet, 138.

Büchner, Dr. L., his Man in the Past, Present, and Future, translated by W. S. Dallas, critical notice of, 203–205.

Capital and Labor, article on, 56–89 — grievances of the workingmen, 56 — admitted by Mr. Grant Duff, 57 — theory and folly of strikes, 57–60 — Kellogg's "New Monetary System," its great popularity among workingmen, 60, 61 — its leading features, 62–65 — its hostility to gold and silver, 63 — Gen. Butler's condemnation of coined money, 64 — Mr. Campbell's plan for liquidating the national debt, 65 — if liquidated, a fresh debt would be necessary, 66 — fallacies in Mr. Kellogg's definition of "value," 67–72 — "real value," 68 — "legal value," 69–72 — folly of demanding a uniform rate of interest, 72–74 — interest and the value of money, 74 — "cheap money," 75–79 — would not help the poor, 79–82 — workingmen's grievances and their proper remedies, 82–86 — oppression by great corporations, 82 — injustice of present system of banking, 83 — annual war charge the most grievous wrong to society, 84 — errors of property owners, 86–89.

Capital Punishment, The Rationale of the Opposition to, article on, 138–150 — facility of hanging a hundred and fifty years ago, 138 — this generation compassionate, 139 — the death penalty slovenly and capricious in its administration, 139–145 — not uniform in different times and places, 141 — depends on accident of magistrate's personal character, 142 — unpopularity of pardoning murderers, 142 — respectability makes hanging difficult, 143 — unequal skill in administering punishment, 144 — factitious and unjust infamy and terror thrown upon the culprit as compared with his fellow-men, 145 — strangeness of being put to death, 145 — anything that coincides with our experience accepted without question, anything crossing it shocks us, 146 — death penalty radically different from any other punishment, 147 — the "Spectator's" contempt for an opinion against capital punishment produced by witnessing an execution, 148 — society can punish very disagreeably without taking life, 149.

Commune, Causes of the, article on, 90–109 — long-standing political and social conspiracies against order in France, 90 — value of testimony taken before committee of the National Assembly appointed to investigate the "causes of the 18th of March," 90, 91 — weakness of the Socialists at the fall of Napoleon, 91 — disadvantages and responsibilities of the Government of National Defence, 91–93 — testimony of Gens. Le Flô and Trochu, 93 — police become guardians of disorder, 94 — Trochu's account of formation of the National Guard, 95 — character of the officers, Flourens, 96 — apparent partiality toward the disorderly, 97 — inefficiency of military operations, 97 — the coup de main of Oct. 31, 98 — character and acts of the Mayors of Paris chosen Nov. 1 99 — M. Cresson's appointment and efficiency as Prefect of Police, 100 — difficulty in arresting dis-organizers, 101, 102 — persistent feebleness of the government and its effect upon the people, 102 — Jules Ferry attributed the insurrection to the madness of the siege, 103 — disintegration of National Guard after the capitulation, 104 — Jules Favre's journey from Versailles to Paris, 104 — appearance of Central Committee, 105 — matters aggravated by course of National Assembly, 106 — failure of attempt to seize cannon held by National Guard, March 18, 107 — evacuation of Paris by order of government, 108 — Commune largely chargeable to weakness and folly of Government of National Defence, 108.

Eastlake, Charles L., his Hints on Household Taste, edited by Charles C. Perkins, critical notice of, 206–208.

Eliot, George, her Middlemarch, critical notice of, 432–440.

Evans, John, his Ancient Stone Implements, Weapons, and Ornaments of Great Britain, critical notice of, 213–216.

Evolution of Self-Consciousness, 245–310.

Fisher, George P., his The Reformation, critical notice of, 440–447.

Fiske, John, his Myths and Myth-Makers, critical notice of, 429–432.

Flood, Henry, and the Condition of Ireland from Swift to O'Connell, article on, 44–55 — opinions and statements of Mr. Lecky, 45–54 — oppressions and abuses under which Ireland bent in eighteenth century, 45 — Flood's efforts in and out of Parliament, 46–48 — his alienation from Grattan, 51 — his Reform bill, 52 — his intolerance of Catholics, 53 — failure in Parliament, 54.

Frothingham, Richard, his Rise of the Republic of the United States, critical notice of, 425–429.

Gautier, Théophile, article on, 310–329 — complete in his way, 310 — a most accomplished literary artist, 311 — characteristics of his nature, mode of thought, and literary aptitudes, 311–313 — injustice of judging him by his Mademoiselle de Maupin, 314 — his poem L'Art, 314–316 — Émaux et Camées, 316 — exquisite charm of his descriptions of travel, 318, 319 — Nature supremely entertaining to him, 319 — wonderful freshness of Tableaux de Siége, 320 — his supreme appreciation of physical qualities, 321 — Une Nuit de Cléopâtre, 323 — Capitaine Fracasse, 324 — Gautier as dramatic and art critic, good-natured but not profound or trustworthy, 325–327 — his comedies, 327 — his constant and perfect success in his circumscribed sphere, 329.

German School of Music, the New, 217–245.

Herder, article on, 389–424 — close connection between the rise of German literature and the intellectual, moral, and social emancipation of the individual, 389 — Lessing freed German literature from foreign despotism, 390 — Herder the real originator of the German civilization of the nineteenth century, 391 — what had been done by Klopstock, Wieland, and Winckelmann, 391 — Herder's first impulse derived from Rousseau, 392 — Schlegel called him the "mythologist of German literature," 394 — his universality of intellectual activity, 395 — his debt to Hamann, 396 — established the fact that poetry precedes prose, 397 — eulogy of the force and simplicity of expression in savages, 397, 398 — great merit and popularity of his Stimmen der Völker, 400–405 — his estimate of Homer, 402 — Vico's Scienza Nuova, 403 — Herder's definition of the Lied, 404 — exceptionally high estimate of fable, 405 — contempt for Latin poetry, 407 — real introduction of Shakespeare to Germany, 408 — criticism of Winckelmann's concessions to Greek art, 409 — Goethe's abandonment of sound art views, 410 — Herder's cosmopolitism, 411 — contempt of classical and admiration of idiomatic writers, 412, 413 — his extraordinary influence concerning origin of language, philosophy of history, philology, 414 — recognition of close connection between character, circumstances, and intellectual productions of a people, 415 — theological views, 416–418 — his influence on Biblical criticism, 419 — placed humanity above nationality, 420 — his patriotism, 421 — his universality and immense influence, 422–424.

Indian Question, The, article on, 329–388 — policy of the government to make treaties with Indian tribes, until 1871, 329, 334 — no lack of dignity in it while the Indians were stronger, 330, 331 — territory ceded by Indians, 332 — their unquestioned right to it, 333 — Indian title extinguished by conquest only in one instance, in Minnesota in 1862, 334 — resolution adopted by Congress in 1871, forbidding future treaties with Indians, 329, 334 — no law now for dealing with them, 335 — their original character, 336 — how to treat them regarded as obstacles to progress of railways and settlements, 337–357 — real unanimity of the people on the Indian question, 337–340 — public sentiment of Arizona, 338 — in Eastern communities, 339 — actually or potentially hostile tribes number 60,000, 340–344 — tribes whose alliance is faithful and serviceable, 342 — judiciousness of using Indians as soldiers, 343 — conditions of peace with the tribes, 345–351 — murder of Powell near Fort Laramie in 1872, 345 — subsistence of tribes, 346 — no loss of national dignity in ignoring their assumptions and endurable misdemeanors, 348 — this policy promotes the interests and welfare of those whites on the remotest frontiers, 349 — does not incite fresh outrages, 351 — is infinitely cheaper than war, 352 — need of guarding against a general Indian war not likely to continue beyond 1876, 354 — success of the reservation system, 355 — susceptibility of Indians to swift and severe punishment, 356 — past and present treatment of the Indian question necessarily inadequate, 357 — various results of experiments already made, 358–360 — civilization among Cherokees, 361 — other tribes equally civilized, 362 — semi-civilized tribes, the Wahpeton and Sisseton Sioux, 362, 363 — the Pawnees, 363, 364 — proper policy to be pursued toward Indian tribes when they cease to be dangerous, 364–384 — reservation system should be made general, 365–368 — Indians should be entirely separate from whites, 365 — present reservations very faulty, needing thorough recasting, 366–368 — considerations which favor two general reservations east of Rocky Mountains, 368–372 — ethnographical arrangement not strictly practicable, 370, 371 — reservations must be guarded against intrusions by whites, 372–374 — instances of impudent invasions, retrieved by the government, 373 — Indians must be kept upon their reservations, 374 — government should exercise rigid reformatory control over them until one generation is fairly started on a course of self-improvement, 375 — provisions made by government for partial subsistence of Indians during their transition from savage to civilized life should be generous, 376–378 — endowments for the several tribes should be capitalized and placed in trust for their benefit, 378–381 — the future of the Indian, 384–388.

Johnson, Samuel, his Oriental Religions, critical notice of, 210–212.

Kendall, Amos, his Autobiography, edited by William Stickney, critical notice of, 166–176.

Lamon, Ward H., his Life of Abraham Lincoln, critical notice of, 184–189.

Mixed Populations of North Carolina, article on, 150–166 — contrasts between Old World and New World physical features, 150 — the house, index of type of civilization, very different at the South, 151 — the American campaign, ruined by the war, 152, 153 — negroes increase away from cities, — at Gordonsville, 153 — fairly successful as miners, 154 — the swamp regions of Pamlico and Albemarle Sounds, 155 — the colonists who settled Eastern North Carolina, Swiss, German, French, English, 157–161 — the Germans, 157 — wretched style of living there, 159 — what if the Mayflower had been driven to North Carolina instead of Massachusetts? 160 — perfect blending of the colonists, 161 — the negroes, 161–166 — unmodified by climate like the whites, 161 — possible causes of this inflexibility, 162 — encouraging condition in Eastern North Carolina, 163 — harmonious relations between blacks and whites, 163 — very different in coast region of South Carolina, 164 — position of negro seems to be in inverse proportion to the help he has received, 165 — numbers not increasing, 165 — South needs more varied industry, 165.

Marquardt, Joachim, und Theodor Mommsen's Handbuch der Römischen Alterthümer, critical notice of, 447–452.

Music, The New German School of, article on, 217–245 — an outgrowth of the political revolution of 1848, 218 — Wagner's life, 218–220 — aim of his writings, to revolutionize art, society, politics, and religion, 220 — his Art and Revolution, destructive, 220–222 — his Future Work of Art, constructive, 222 — his Opera and Drama, applying his principles, 222–225 — partial or full expression of his ideas in his operas, 225 — counter-views and criticisms evoked by his theories and works, 225–235 — impossibility of uniting all the fine arts, 226–229 — nearest approach to such union in the Middle-Age Passion-Plays, 228 — each art most successful when free to work out its highest object by itself, 229 — unsatisfactory result of trying to wed music and poetry in perfect equality, 230 — falsity of "infinite melody," 230 — Otto Jahn's criticism of "Tannhäuser," 232, 233 — objections to the "Ring of the Nibelungen," 233 — Wagner's weakness as a dramatic poet, 235 — secret of his popularity, 235–237 — master of scenic effects, 235, 236 — skilful and original in treating action of the play, 237 — his music realistic, lacking the spiritual element, 238 — differences between Wagner and Liszt and the true musical reformers, 239–241 — Berlioz's idea of art, 241 — brief survey of principal epochs in development of modern music, 242–244.

Napoleonism, The Rise of, article on, 1–44 — difficult political problems arise after civil wars, 1 — tendency of revolutions begun for the people to end in greater centralization, 2 — Napoleonism strong through the illusion of the people that though imperial in form it was in reality republican, 3 — chaotic state of France when Napoleon I. appeared, 4 — circumstances of his youth and education, 4–7 — his freedom from restraints of morality and good faith, 7, 8 — Constitution of year III. and its fatal defects, 9 — victory of the convention and Napoleon, 13:h Vendémiaire, 11 — his relations to the Directory, 13, 14 — his barbarity and perfidy to Venice, 15–18 — Dumolard's opposition speech and its speedy consequence, the coup d'état of 18th

Fructidor, 18 – 22 — motives and failure of Egyptian expedition, 22 – 25 — Napoleon's return to France, 25 – 28 — his adherents, 28 — efforts to rid himself of Sieyès, 29 – 32 — coup d'état of 18th Brumaire, 32 – 44.

North Carolina, mixed populations of, 150 – 166.

Revere, Joseph W., his Keel and Saddle, critical notice of, 180 – 184.

Richardson, Abby Sage, her Songs from the Old Dramatists, critical notice of, 208 – 210.

Self-Consciousness, Evolution of, article on, 245 – 310 — birth of self-consciousness not regarded as natural, like the evolution of infantile life, 245 — word "evolution" conveys a false impression to the imagination, 246 — mixed natures of some mental and bodily powers, 246, 247 — discovery of new properties or powers perfectly natural, 248 — the mystic's theory of the supernatural, 248 — mysticism still prevalent in metaphysics, — how it must be met, 249 – 251 — proper meaning of "science" and "scientific," 251 — enthymematic reasoning in men and in animals, 253 – 255 — action of images in governing trains of thought, 255 – 264 — missing links in thinking, 256 – 258 — memory and dreams, 259, note — difference between hunter's and dog's mental processes on hearing the word "fox," 261 — relation of habits to instinct, 265 – 267 — volitions, 267 — cognition of "cogito," 269 – 276 — opposing views of "idealism" and "natural realism," 276 – 280 — substance, 280 — use of language by barbarians, 281 — by metaphysicians, 282 – 284 — Sir W. Hamilton's "ontological passion," 285 — his idea of subjective certainty, 286 — causes, 288 – 291 — mystery, 291 – 293 — modern civilization includes both metaphysical and scientific tendencies in speculation, 294 — the poet's heritage of instinctive thoughts and feelings, 294 — common misconception of theory of evolution, that any one of contemporary races, or species derived from a common origin, fully represents the characters of its progenitors, 295, 296 — natural selection not essentially concerned in first production of any form, but in improving and perpetuating forms already produced, 297 — origin and development of language, 298 – 310 — voice, gestures, 298 — invention of words, 299 — command of language, 300 — the divergences of language into dialects and distinct languages, 301 — changes in language, 302, 303 — volition and its part in development of language, 304 – 310.

Smith, Walter, his Art Education, critical notice of, 189 – 194.

Tyler, Samuel, his Memoir of Roger Brooke Taney, critical notice of, 194 – 203.

Whitney, W. D., his Oriental and Linguistic Studies, critical notice of, 176 – 180.

University Press, Cambridge: Printed by Welch, Bigelow, and Co.